Julius Caesar Plays to Over 2000 During Three Night Run

William Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, this year's Frobenius Society offering, played to audiences totaling well over 2,000 during its three night run in St. John's Auditorium, March 27-28.

After starting the play on opening night, Mr. Walter Jones, drama club president, announced that the play would be presented at three other dates in the city on March 27, 28, and 29. The entire production is now well over a month ahead of its original schedule.

The highest praise went to Charles Loney (Brutus) and Robert Terry (Cassius), who have received a glowing review in the local press. The play was staged three times on "the road," so that it can be seen by as many people as possible.
