Reliability—His Trademark

In every well-known organization, there are a few men who perform the thankless jobs, but who make the organization what it is. These men are the backbone of the organization. They are the men who are always ready to give a hand wherever and whenever his help is sought.

Joseph has served his school and his parish for five years as a member of the Student Society. This year he has served as vice-president of that organization.

The FLYER has much good of Joe's writing ability for three years. He could possibly be classified as the staff's most dependable reporter.

Student Conformity

What allures today's average student to a web of conformity? Perhaps we find safety in numbers—a solid wall from which we may fear, criticism, attacks. Cannot today's youth stand on his own two feet?

Granted, that is a social being; but he is also an individual. Possibly the urge to conform, besides being natural, is based on a desire or idea that better work can be done in organized groups. This is certainly the case with extracurricular activities. These organizations do not seek exaggerated individualism, yet they do require leaders—men who will speak and think for themselves.

It is extremely difficult to present an accurate estimation of the value of conformity. It is not difficult to see where conformity should be required, however. Shall we conform to the group whose status symbols include drinking, smoking, etc.; or can we afford to be non-conformists and stand for what we realize is right?

We have become part of a stream of water tossed into the air of opinion. There are persons, however, who know why they act and think as they do, and are willing to conform to do so under no false pretenses. These are our leaders.
